PREFACE

This “Directory of Street Directories” was initially inspired by two pieces of work on the directories and almanacs of the province of Ulster by Noel Nesbitt and the late Ronnie Adams. In 1959, Noel Nesbitt compiled A bibliography of Ulster directories for a competition held by the Northern Branch of the Library Association. This list contained works with directory information on the nine county Province of Ulster or parts of it. He consulted the library holdings of only three repositories, Belfast Public Libraries, the Linen Hall Library and Magee Library in Derry. The bibliography was organized into four sections – Belfast only directories; directories of the rest of Ulster; general commercial directories and United Kingdom directories that included Ulster entries.

By contrast while Ronnie Adams chose to examine in greater detail directory entries for towns and villages, it was in a limited number of directories from 1820 to 1870 and only for the six counties that make up Northern Ireland. He used fifteen titles, beginning with Bradshaw’s directories for Belfast and Newry etc. which appeared in 1820 along with Henderson, MacCabe, Macloskie, Martin, the Post-Office directories of 1843 and 1870, Scarlett and Wynne. Most were published in Ulster but Pigot and Slater directories for the United Kingdom were also included. The resulting unpublished list, compiled for the LA/PRONI Working Party for Local Studies, formed a basis for the compilation of Section Two of this guide and directory.

The scope for this guide and directory of street directories is much broader than the two previous pieces of work. There has also been an attempt to identify and include the small local directories omitted from ffoliott and Begley’s guide to directories in Irish genealogy: a record finder. The earliest directory entries are from the beginning of the nineteenth century and finish as originally intended in 1914. Almanac publications that include directories are also added. A return to the nine county Province of Ulster has also been adopted. As can be seen from the acknowledgements, a greater number of repositories were involved. Searches on the Internet also turned up holdings for the county libraries in Donegal, Cavan and Monaghan. Copies of transcripts of early British directories with any Irish content were also sought out from family history societies and generously given by individuals. Facsimile editions were harder to find, and short print runs make it even more difficult for libraries to purchase successfully from abroad. In the five years it has taken to research, compile and edit this information, copies of some directories have been lost or have simply disintegrated beyond repair. No guide is ever definitive but this LISC (NI) Local History Panel project has attempted to record what can be viewed now as unique publications, and we are fortunate to still have easy access to the wealth of local history information contained in them.

HOW TO USE THE DIRECTORY OF STREET DIRECTORIES

SECTION ONE

A chronological list of street and trade directories, this is arranged by date first published or nearest, with a detailed description of each directory. If for example, you want to know more about the Belfast and Province of Ulster directory go to SECTION ONE - 1852. Notes on the contents of each directory have been added, by volume and by year, with new features, changes, omissions and mistakes. The locations of libraries etc. where they may be consulted have been added.

For a list of directory titles arranged by county and first publication date see SECTION ONE – Quick Guide.

SECTION TWO

Go to SECTION TWO if you want to know the earliest entry in a street directory for a particular town or village in Ulster. Abbreviations have been given to all the directories and these are listed first, followed by an alphabetical listing of towns and villages in the nine counties of Ulster with the date of the first entry that appears in a directory and all subsequent entries up to 1914.

SECTION THREE

This is a listing of entries of villages in the vicinity of Belfast with the date of the first entry that appears in a street directory and all subsequent entries up to 1914.

SECTION FOUR

This section indicates where to find the directories listed with contact details of libraries and the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI).

Introduction

The value of Street Directories

Street directories are easily used, accessible publications for the local historian. They can provide some insight into the growth or decline of towns, the social fabric of localities, and the commercial and industrial development of a province. They are the type of publication that illustrates a more settled period of economic growth and prosperity. Compared to maps or the valuation records they may not be the best source to study the growth of a town or village, but their layout is simple and straightforward, and they can include a wide variety of pieces of information that might not be so easily obtained elsewhere. They can be used to trace people as long as they were affluent or held a trade, or to study occupations that have now disappeared. But the chief reason that these directories were published was for trade and the pursuit of business. The nineteenth century directory is an indicator of the importance of trade, at local and national level – country met town, farmer met trader, the wider world engaged with the small locality at fairs and markets.

Nowhere is the growth of a town more aptly illustrated from the street directories than Belfast itself. The Donegall landlords' liberal leasing policy gave merchants in Belfast opportunity to speculate in urban development and expand the town during the following century into a leading industrial centre. Cotton manufacturing began in the town at the end of the eighteenth century, it laid the foundation for the expansion of textile manufacturing during the nineteenth century, dominated by the linen industry. Shipbuilding and engineering followed the expansion of the textile industry. These big industries gave Belfast prosperity and expanding suburbs. Each new publication of a nineteenth century street directory shows the building of new streets, the move north and south, east and west of the town, the growing importance of the port and harbour of Belfast to its hinterland and the rest of Ulster.

Beyond Belfast there were a number of well established commercial centres such as Londonderry, Coleraine, Newry and Carrickfergus and the Plantation market towns of Lisburn and Ballynahinch. Elsewhere in Ulster estate towns and villages were planned and developed for commercial exploitation from the middle of the eighteenth century, such as the linen villages of Fintona in Tyrone and Emyvale in Monaghan. This wave of estate village creation could occur because of a developing road system within and between counties. Landlords, keen to develop the economic potential of their estates, established many new villages, or re-established older settlements. Some were remodelled settlements like Rathfriland and Newtownards, others like Moy and Hilltown were completely new developments. The coming of the Lowry family to the area provided the catalyst for Pomeroy village to grow, as they were improving and resident landlords. Cootehill's linen industry provided the town and its environs with both employment and the demand for goods and services. There was also a landlord push to the west with Bunbeg and Dunfanaghy in Donegal, helped by the advent of a new tourist industry in Ireland that replaced the European continent during the French revolution. In the 1820s and 1830s the London Companies took an interest in their Plantation towns, remodelling Kilrea, Draperstown and Moneymore. Industrial and mill villages and towns in the northeast of Ireland absorbed into the linen economy of Antrim, Down, Armagh and Tyrone. The company towns of Sion Mills and Bessbrook and mill villages such as Darkley, Milford, Gilford, Drumnaness, Ligoniel, and Donaghcloney continued to expand throughout the nineteenth century. During the second half of the century came the growth and peak of the seaside resort in Ulster, aided by the railway's ability to link them to towns and villages along the route – Portrush, Portstewart, Dundrum were favourite destinations for the people of Belfast, and Greencastle for Derry. This urban development is reflected and recorded in the street directory.

The growth in the publication of Street Directories

The earliest directories in Ireland appeared in the eighteenth century as lists of people and collections of information that would be useful to government and also to commercial interests. The earliest publication appeared in Dublin in 1728 entitled Watson's Gentleman's and Citizen's Almanack. This was published annually from 1729 and included lists of post towns and mail carriages. In 1752 Wilson's Dublin Directory, published annually until 1837, included a listing of traders and commercial interests in the city. The first 'general' directory for Ireland was produced in 1788, Richard Lucas's General Directory of the Kingdom of Ireland, included lists of residents in twenty-seven Irish towns, but excluded those in Ulster. Taylor and Skinner's Maps of the roads of Ireland published in 1778 had an element of directory information in it, giving the names of noble and gentleman's residences, together with those of the owners marked along the principal highways, and adding a general index of these persons names listed at the back of the volume again with references to the maps. By 1800 the popularity of the directory was evident, for as industry was expanding in Ireland and Britain, local manufacturers were no longer personally known to each other and they needed to find new outlets and markets.

Belfast publishers were far behind those in other provincial towns in Ireland in producing the sort of directory that was an annual feature in Dublin by the end of the eighteenth century. A directory for Limerick was produced in 1769 and Cork city and six other towns were included in the Cork Directory published in 1787. The earliest directory entry for Belfast goes back to 1805 and the town's inclusion in the fourth edition of the Holden triennial directory of the United Kingdoms and Wales. By the 1811 edition of the Holden directory, agents acting for the publisher had gathered commercial entries on a small selection of towns and villages outside Belfast, namely Gilford, Hillsborough, Killileagh, Lisburn, Portaferry and Saintfield. However by then the first Belfast directory, of which there are still copies, had been published in 1807 from the firm of Smyth and Lyons. There is a bibliographic record of an 1806 edition of a Belfast directory by the same publishers, but a copy of this work cannot be traced. This firm, Smyth and Lyons had been responsible for publishing the popular Belfast almanac, so a directory publication must have seemed a good business opportunity in a developing and prosperous town. 1807 was also the year that Arthur Thompson carried out the task of enumerating the inhabitants and houses in Belfast, with 22,095 people and 3,514 houses in all. But the Smyth and Lyons directory only gives a few hundred entries, naming gentlemen, professionals and more prosperous traders and artisans of the town. The printers obtained funding for publication by subscription from the gentry and businessmen of their locality and they used petitions; lists of voters, town surveys completed for landlords to provide information on who was who and where they lived. The 1807 edition of the directory was followed by an 1808 volume. By mid-nineteenth century there had been at least sixteen directories published covering Belfast and its neighbourhood, meaning most of Down and part of County Antrim, but few publishers other than Matthew Martin and John Henderson had sustained more than a single edition.

In 1812, prompted by a growth in postal services, Ambrose Leet the first clerk in the Inland Department of the General Post Office in Dublin produced a postal directory A List of Market Towns, Villages, Gentlemen's Seats and other noted places in Ireland. Two years later he published what is frequently called the Directory of Noted Places, compiled as he described from official and private returns to him as the collator, the contents of which are fully described on the title page: -

A Directory to the market towns, villages, gentlemen's seats and other noted places in Ireland, with reference to the counties, in which they are situated, the post-town to which each seat is attached, their description, or if it is a seat, the name of the resident; to which is added a general index of persons names, referring to the page where their address is to be found, together with lists of the post towns and present rates of postage throughout the Empire.

John Holden had included the major Irish trading towns, Dublin, Cork and Belfast in his early nineteenth century triennial directories. Over the subsequent decades other directory publishers included entries for market towns, villages and ports all over Ireland. Outside Ireland a number of directories continued to be published that included some but not all towns in Ulster. James Pigot, a Manchester born engraver, began publishing trade directories for that city in 1811 and by 1820 was publishing the Pigot National Commercial directories for Ireland, Scotland and the northern counties of England. Essentially a trade directory, the Pigot Commercial directory of Ireland, Scotland, and the four most Northern counties of England for 1820-21 & 1822 listed individuals by occupation and is one of the most familiar directories. Yet this volume only includes directory entries for a limited number of towns in Ulster: Antrim, Armagh, Belfast, Coleraine, Lisburn, Londonderry, Newry and Strabane. The 1821 census showed that there were twenty seven towns in the province of Ulster each with a population of over 2000 persons, so the commercial possibilities determined that the 1824 Pigot edition was a much more inclusive publication. For the next edition agents visited towns from Ballycastle to Monaghan and Portaferry to Ballyshannon: -

PIGOT and Co.'s city of Dublin and Hibernian provincial directory, containing a classification of the nobility, gentry, clergy, professional gentlemen, merchants, and manufacturers of Dublin and upwards of two hundred & twenty of the principal cities, seaports and towns of Ireland, alphabetically arranged in provinces; concise historical and descriptive notices of each town; a street list for Dublin; an alphabetical reference to all nobility, gentry and clergy in the provincial cities and towns treated of in the work; an accurate and complete account of the coaches, carriers, and other conveyances by land and water; separate references, in which all the names are alphabetically arranged in Dublin and the other towns of Ireland, where the population amounts to 40,000; a table of the distances of sixty-one of the principal towns from one another, and of each from Dublin.

James Pigot some years later went into business with Isaac Slater; when the partnership dissolved, the Slater directories continued to be published until the end of the nineteenth century providing competition for James Alexander Henderson's Belfast and the Province of Ulster directory. As the commercial and professional directories began to increase in number, entries for the larger towns in Ulster, particularly where trade and industry were booming became more detailed.

Pigot did not produce another Irish street directory in the decade that followed 1824. A number of local Belfast publishers sought to fill the market gap with a series of directories, each one trying to add some new piece of information or a new approach for the customer. Robert Donaldson's directory was published in 1831; William Matier produced his directory in 1835, followed four years later by the first edition of a Belfast directory from Matthew Martin. John Henderson published his first Belfast directory in 1843, the same year the first volume of Thom's Irish almanac and official directory was produced. Publishers of directories found that to meet the various and dissimilar purposes for which a directory was required resulted in three arrangements of names – an alphabetical list of householders and businesses: a classification of professions, trades and designations: and a listing of the principal streets with the names of householders in residence according to the numbering of each street. The publishers of the nineteenth century Belfast directories also all included a common feature: a range of public information such as a summary of the branches of municipal government, the principal institutions both social and commercial, and timetables for mail, coach and steam conveyances.

Local directories throughout the rest of Ulster also became more common, Bradshaw, Lennox, MacCabe and Macloskie publishing directories for Armagh, Lisburn, Londonderry, Newry and County Fermanagh. Entries in a street directory for a town or village in Ulster would typically include a description of the town, the various places of worship with the names of the ministers and the location of local schools. This was followed with information that defined the relative prosperity of a town or village, a list of the gentry of the area, the more affluent farmers, professional men, merchants and traders with names and addresses. The pattern of alphabetical listing of residents and street-by-street entries that was used in directories of Dublin and Belfast was not followed for towns elsewhere. The size of each volume would have been prohibitive. But this illustrates another difficulty when using street directories, mid-nineteenth century County Armagh may have had one of the heaviest concentrations of rural population in Europe during the 1840s, but only the affluent merchants, traders, farmers and notable citizens are listed in the directories.

Nevertheless using the trade directories such as Pigot and later Slater it is possible to get a detailed impression of the types of business that existed and developed in towns throughout Ulster. In Pigot's directory of 1824 Cootehill in County Cavan had a population of one thousand people, enough people to support four doctors, three apothecaries and two lawyers. There were also twenty four public houses in the town; business for these establishments the result of a weekly produce market and fairs held four times during the year. In the same directory the entry for the "neat, clean, and highly respectable seaport town" of Donaghadee, from where the Mail Packet sailed daily to Port Patrick, has detailed information on the then developing new harbour, the harbour commissioners. The importance of the Custom House in the directory entry should also be noted as during the 1820s, in an attempt to deal with smuggling along the coastline, coastguard stations were established at Donaghadee and along the Ards peninsula.

The compilation of Street Directories

Methods of directory compilation varied between different publishers and sometimes editions. Subscription was a popular method of publishing, the publishers often relying on the subscriber's need for accuracy in their directory entry. Subscribers to the publication could have an entry in the Smyth and Lyons directory of 1807. Apart from relying on subscribers, Holden and Pigot also employed agents to go out and compile the Irish town entries and this method was later adopted by a number of directory publishers. The principal difficulty facing all the publishers of directories was that people and businesses moved around, changing address, either looking for more advantageous lets or better premises, or if in financial difficulty what they could afford. With the development of Belfast, building and rebuilding going on everywhere in the town, street numbers and street names could also change between editions. Joseph Smyth gives an insight into the difficulties facing the compilers of directories in the preface of his 1820 directory of Belfast: -

About three years ago the houses in this town were numbered on a new plan, by which the odd numbers were all arranged on one side of the street, and the even numbers on the other. Some of the inhabitants erased these numbers, and replaced the old; which, with the subsequent erection and alteration of houses, renders it extremely difficult to give addresses with accuracy. Not expecting, however, that this inconvenience would be soon remedied, the publisher had collected and arranged the materials of this work, when he received an intimation that the houses were to be numbered anew; and as such a change, taking place after the publication of a Directory, would materially lessen its utility, it was considered advisable to defer issuing it until the new numbers could be obtained for insertion...

The expected change in the numbers has not taken place, nor is it understood to be in immediate contemplation; and as it is become necessary to publish, for the satisfaction of the subscribers, the consequent imperfections of the work, (not easily avoided in a first publication of this kind) can now only be remedied in the next Directory – which will appear in two years hence...

The difficulties surrounding the publishing of this directory must have dissuaded Joseph Smyth from publishing another Belfast directory but he continued to publish the Belfast almanack. Twenty years later these difficulties facing publishers remained much the same. In 1840 Matthew Martin wrote in the preface of the second edition of his Belfast directory: -

THE Compiler of the present Publication having found, both from observation and experience, that in this town more changes take place at, and immediately after November, than at any other period of the year, it has been thought advisable not to commence the work, until the month of December, when families are likely to be settled for the winter.. Since that time, almost every house in town has been visited, and the proprietors personally consulted, respecting their business and address. The changes in establishments, additional addresses, and removals, (coming under observation) while the work was at press, have been attended to, and revised in their respective lists.

Wynne's 1865 commercial directory was also compiled by personal inquiry at the place of business. The compilers of this directory also responded to requests from various merchants, manufacturers and tradesmen for similar information in a number of provincial towns, which as stated in the preface added expense to the production and caused some delay in the appearance of the publication for sale. All publishers of street directories invited their readers to inform them of errors and omissions. Delays in publication were frequent; these delays often formed the subject of the publisher's preface. Agents in Ireland acted for English publishers such as Holden, Pigot and Slater and this caused a number of delays in publication. Advertisements in each edition were one way for publishers to offset the costs of compilation and most volumes had substantial number of pages devoted to the wide range of goods, services and commercial activities throughout the province. In almost every directory or new edition of a particular title, its publisher or editor emphasises the desire to be as accurate as possible and give as much useful information as possible. But as John Gillespie acknowledges in his 1897 directory of County Monaghan, "it is very hard to be perfection in a publication of this kind".

The Belfast Directories

In 1819 and 1820 two directories of Belfast were published, the first by Thomas Bradshaw, the latter by Joseph Smyth. Smyth had continued to print the Belfast almanack and the edition for 1820 included a street plan of the town of Belfast but for some reason this was not published in the directory, the publisher adding a view of the Commercial Buildings instead. The Smyth directory of 1820 gives a list of inhabitants and the government and institutions of the town, there is no arrangement by street in the volume. There are more names of inhabitants of Belfast in the Smyth directory than in Bradshaw. However in addition to a straightforward alphabetical listing of inhabitants, Bradshaw added an arrangement of names by trade. The Bradshaw directory also included other listings - churches in Belfast with their situations, preachers and times of service; miscellaneous notes respecting the town; an additional directory for nearby Lisburn and finally, a list of gentlemen, merchants in the neighbourhood of Belfast and Lisburn that are not in the main directory.

Iles William, police watchman, 80, Millfield street

These two extracts show both the value of directory information but also the difficulties that can arise in using this information. There are more names in the Smyth extract but both have a different variant spelling of the name Irvin / Irvine. William Irwin in Bradshaw appears as John Irwin senior in the Smyth directory. Changes of address may have just been re-numbering of the houses of that street, or possibly relocation to different premises. New skills and services in a thriving town have been added to the entry in the Smyth directory: Francis Ireland offering paper hanging as well as plumbing and glazing and James Ireland had become a japanner, making lacquered tinware. The two directories also give us an example of enterprise with Thomas Irwin, described as a huxter / huckster or street pedlar in Bradshaw and a grocer in Smyth. There is also the added entry Iles, out of alphabetical sequence, showing a late addition to the directory. The contents and arrangement of information in some directories can be more valuable to particular researchers and may include interesting asides for local historians.

Publishers of street directories copied ideas from each other, all the time aiming to give the contemporary market the most accurate and fullest information about the towns included in each volume. When another local Belfast directory was attempted ten years later with the Donaldson Belfast directory for 1831-2 it contained a copy of the charter of Belfast followed by an alphabetical list of the merchants, manufacturers and inhabitants in the town with a new section for Ballymacarrett. It also added an account of the public institutions in Belfast, a guide to the Giant's Causeway and finally a foldout table of reciprocal distances of sixty-one towns in Ireland. The Post Office continued to have an interest in finding out who lived or traded where and 1843 also saw the publication of the Post-Office Belfast annual directory for 1843-44 in Belfast. It followed the same arrangement as Henderson and Martin with "an alphabetical list of the nobility, gentry, merchants, manufacturers, traders, and householders of Belfast and its vicinity; a street arrangement with names of the inhabitants in the principal streets of business and residence in Belfast, arranged according to the successive numbers of their dwellings or establishments. The streets are in alphabetical order, pointing to the adjoining street, and frequently the nos. from which they branch; a classification of professions, principal trades etc. and a list of the principal towns etc. in the North of Ireland".

Some interesting comparisons of coverage, accuracy and inclusion may be drawn from the Belfast directories published in the 1840s from two different publishers, Matthew Martin and John Henderson. The Henderson and Martin publications are notable because their Belfast directories not only come in consecutive editions, both these publishers recognized that out-of-date information was frustrating for those looking for new business contacts, suppliers, markets, but also because they describe the commercial and industrial success of the great emporium of Ulster – business was life in Belfast and life was business. Matthew Martin, publisher of Martin's Belfast directory in 1839, 1840 1841 and 1842 was according to his adverts in the directories, an accountant by profession. His business interests included maintaining a servants' registry and a house agency office. Matthew Martin copied the arrangement of his directories from the one produced by William Matier in 1835 to include an arrangement by street. John Henderson was already in the printing trade but in addition to being a printer he was also a publisher, bookseller, stationer, general news agent and proprietor of the Northern Circulating Library. This subscription library, according to the advertisement contained a collection of standard historical works, travel books and popular literature of the day available at generous yearly, quarterly, monthly and nightly rates. John Henderson published his first commercial directory Henderson's New Belfast directory and Northern Repository in 1843. More than half of this first volume is taken up with an extensive entries for the peerage of Ireland, the law profession in Ireland and local government of the borough of Belfast and the counties of Antrim, Armagh and Down with a small selection of entries for other towns; Banbridge, Hillsborough, Holywood, Killileagh, Dungannon, Cookstown, Lurgan, and Markethill. The second half of the volume is taken up with the Belfast directory. However subsequent editions of John Henderson's directory in 1846, 1850 and 1852 concentrated on Belfast alone.

The Belfast and Province of Ulster Directory

In 1852 the most popular Ulster directory the Belfast and Province of Ulster directory first appeared. The BPUD was published by volume and edition from 1852 until 1894 when it became an annual, and continued throughout the twentieth century until it finally ceased publication in 1996. The publisher, James Alexander Henderson, announced with some confidence that the first volume was an instalment of what he aspired to undertake.

It is the intention of the Publisher, relying on the patronage and support of the Inhabitants of Belfast, to issue the Directory periodically, with such alterations and improvements as may be necessary, until the Work shall become a standard book of reference for Belfast and the North of Ireland.

Each of the early volumes has many similarities, often differing only in layout. But one of the aims of this publisher, as the nineteenth century progressed, was to include as many new entries for towns and villages as possible through out the province. This meant that each volume became progressively larger. With the increase in size of the directory it became enormous and difficult task to ensure accuracy and completeness. The relatively sparse appendices of deaths, removals and corrections, from the previous edition or as the volume was compiled, show just how difficult this task must have been for the collators. Nevertheless it was an enduring publication, although not without its competitors for some decades.

The BPUD was to become the most important local directory but in 1852, John Henderson also published what was to be his final Belfast directory. There are 602 streets named in BPUD 1852 but only 507 in what John Henderson described as the original Belfast directory 1852. The BPUD has 70 pages of advertisements from Belfast and Dublin; Henderson has 45 pages devoted to advertising but refers to these advertisements in the main street entries. Comparisons between street entries in each volume show that both publishers were trying to identify and record the business of Belfast in great detail. In BPUD at 41 Waring Street is an entry for Josias Cunningham & Co., foreign agents, general brokers and commission merchants as well as stock and share brokers. J. Cunningham's residence is given as 37 King Street. This piece of information is missing from the Henderson entry but we learn from it that Josias Cunningham & Co. were also agents for the Life Association of Scotland. There is a much fuller entry for the "village" of Ballymacarrett in BPUD with more streets and residents than given in Henderson. But where the two directories really differ is in the fact that BPUD has directory information on forty towns in the province of Ulster for those merchants and manufacturers seeking new business contacts, suppliers and markets. The BPUD continued to include town entries in all its editions with the exception of the 1887 edition which was for Belfast only. Delays in getting information from the provincial towns may have been the reason for this anomaly, or the publisher was acknowledging the expanse of the city and its suburbs as more villages were recorded as being within Belfast's hinterland.

Conclusion

Many of the early directories contain a range of local history information. The close association the town of Belfast had with the Chichester and Donegall family is reflected in many street names. Later directories of Belfast record squares, lanes and places that are no longer apparent in the present city - Albion-Place-Botanic Road; Blue-bell-Entry-Waring Street; Cunningham's Court-Mustard Street; Improvement-Place-Lancaster Street; Tea-Lane-Lower Malone. Many occupations listed in directories have disappeared or are less common – linen lapper, nailer, heckler, carman, cooper, leech importer. Yet these too tell the story of the rise and rise of a great industrial town and city. Outside Belfast directories such as Macloskie or Bassett provide guides to the agricultural, industrial and commercial life of both large and small communities throughout Ulster.

Street directories do have a role in family history research. Yet the researcher must note when using a street directory that it is not totally accurate, because by the time it was printed the information was often out of date; sometimes surnames and information found in the alphabetical list of inhabitants was not added into specific streets addresses; and the names of small tenant farmers, labourers and servants were not included. For the genealogist it is the omission of certain information that may be frustrating, that and the fact that people moved about so much between editions and such movement is not always easy to trace in a directory. Local almanac publishers would also often include lists of ratepayers or voters in towns, villages or districts. One of the great difficulties that libraries and museums have now is locating copies of these directory / almanac publications, as they were considered disposable at the time or were short-lived publications. Many of these small local publications are now quite rare, with only one or two surviving copies and finding them in the second-hand market can be difficult.

Information about people has been compiled from the early eighteenth century onwards for a variety of reasons and obtainable in a variety of publications. Subscription lists found in books; petitions; lists of voters, town surveys completed for landlords all provide information on who was from where. The eighteenth century newspaper can be useful for advertisements with names of people with property for sale, leasing or letting, businesses, and members of societies and clubs. Using a variety of these sources together with the Belfast News-Letter, J.R.R. Adams compiled a "directory" of Belfast for 1740 and published it in the 1993 issue of North Irish Roots. Dublin Corporation Public Libraries have published A Directory of Dublin for the year 1738 compiled from contemporary sources such as Cess records, bail bonds and again contemporary newspapers. These projects took a great deal of effort, ingenuity and time. The local historian has truly to acknowledge just how innovative and inventive the publishers of the early street directories were, that in many aspects these are unique publications, and how fortunate we are to still have easy access to this information.

SECTION ONE

Street and Trade Directories with Almanacs that include lists of Residents, Traders, Nobility, Gentry and Voters arranged in CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER with LOCATION where available.

Each entry contains details of the title page, contents pages and appendices where possible. Original volumes are listed first, followed by facsimile editions if any. Notes have been added about the publishers, the arrangement of each directory and any new features.

The listing begins with a pseudo directory compiled from a variety of printed sources on the history of Belfast. Similar methodology was used by the staff in the Gilbert Library recently used to compile "A directory of Dublin in the year 1738" from contemporary sources; this was published by Dublin Corporation Public Libraries in 2000.

A 'DIRECTORY' of Belfast, c1740
North Irish Roots 4 (2) 1993 pp 16 - 25

Compiled by J.R.R. Adams from information extracted from source material - the roll of freemen of Belfast in 'The Town book of the Corporation of Belfast' 1892; signatures of merchants on a petition in 1740 reproduced in 'History of the town of Belfast' by G. Benn; subscribers lists in the 1743 publications, 'Introduction to universal history' by J.B. Bossuet and 'Lives of the admirals' by J. Campbell.

Although each edition of BPUD was similar in content and layout, improvements were being made all the time. The contents of each volume are as follows: -

Calendar for the year, Historical sketch of the town and trade

Belfast street directory, (Ballymacarrett directory)

Alphabetical directory

Professions and trades directory

Country residents, Local institutions &c

Province of Ulster directory

The preface to the ninth volume of BPUD, 1877 announces an enlarged volume with copious indexes to Local institutions, companies, societies, churches; Street directory with private residences; a Professional directory; Village directory and the Provincial directory. Improving the indexes was an important development in making the BPUD an essential reference tool for business and the professions.

The index would also indicate the different numerical sequences for the Belfast directory and Ulster counties directory within the volume (not in every edition). For the directory user it is important to check these indexes as omissions or mistakes were often corrected in another part of the text, for example in the 1899 directory Craigavad and Dunmurry follow the final provincial entry for Warrenpoint.

Another feature to note was the appendix where alterations, omissions, changes of residence, new streets and corrections were added. In the 1877 edition part of the entry for Armagh city can be found in the appendix and an addition to the entry for Armagh city is in the appendix in the tenth volume, 1880. Also worth noting in some of the volumes is the list of new streets in Belfast that appears in the appendix. As Belfast was developing, new streets and changes of name were sometimes listed as in the 1880 volume. Here you will also find short terraces of houses that become absorbed into longer streets, roads and avenues. In the 1892 edition, volume fourteen in the series, the publishers added an alphabetical list of deaths that had occurred throughout Ulster during the time that the volume was being printed into the appendix. A map of Belfast was prepared for inclusion in the eleventh volume published in 1884, but it should be noted that it is not always in the volumes in various libraries and institutions
